Place and promotion

Place

A wholesaler or shop selling a particular product, such as cars, is a dealer. A reseller sells computers. Wholesalers and retailers are distributors. Wholesalers are sometimes disapprovingly called middlemen. A shop (BrE) or store (AmE) is where people buy things. Companies may call it a retail outlet or sales outlet. Here are some types of shop:

Chain store: part of a group of shops, all with the same name. Convenience store: small shop in a residential area and open long hours. Deep discounter: a supermarket with very low prices.

Department store: very large shop with a wide variety of goods, usually in a town centre.

Drugstore: shop in a town centre in the US which sells medicines; you can also have coffee and meals there.

Hypermarket: very large shop with a wide variety of goods, usually outside a town.

Supermarket: very large shop, selling mainly food.

Promotion

Internet is a new advertising medium. Product endorsements are when famous people recommend a product. A series of advertisements for a particular company or product is an advertising campaign. A person or business that advertises is an advertiser.

The sales force: A company's salespeople (its salesmen and saleswomen) visit customers and persuade them to buy its products. Each member of this salesforce may be responsible for a particular region: his or her sales area or sales territory. The head of the sales force is the sales manager.

Promotion is all the activities supporting the sale of a product, including advertising. It describes a special offer such as a discount or reduced price, a free sample: a small amount of the product to try or taste, a free gift: given with the product and competitions with prizes.
